
Famous thesps in bit-parts before they were famous

Posted by Spearmint Rhino - 24-04-2008 09:09

So, I was just re-watching the first series of Black Adder on DVD, and who should turn up playing a minor peasant character? Oscar-winning, Golden Globe-winning, BAFTA-winning Jim Broadbent, when no-one knew who he was. I'd recognise that nose anywhere.

You know what to do...

The earliest Jim Broadbent role I remember was the quiz show host in Time Bandits. Even by the time he starred in Life Is Sweet (1990), though, I didn't recognise him as a particularly famous actor. Looking through his acting credits on IMDB, I suppose it was his turn in Only Fools And Horses that really made him a household name.

Oh, and Jeremy Irons in Play Away is usually the example that crops up when this subject is raised.

If we're talking Hollywood films, what's actually surprising is how seldom it happens, and how many big stars just seem to arrive more-or-less fully-formed, without ever playing an irrelevant extra or someone who sells the hero a burger.

Posted by Spearmint Rhino - 24-04-2008 09:37

I used to think of Minnie Driver's appearance in Knowing Me, Knowing You With Alan Partridge in those terms, but in recent years Minnie Driver's star status has gently settled down to the level where a bit-part on a Steve Coogan show is exactly where you'd expect to see her.

I think Forest Whittaker was reasonably on the map. Now Johnny Depp in Platoon, I reckon fits better here. As does Dr Cox from Scrubs in Platoon...

Does Liam Neeson in The Mission count?

If we are talking about Hollywood rather than thesps per se then Russell Crowe and Guy Pearce in Neighbours spring to mind. The guy that now plays the Boss in Ugly Betty was, of course, Jim Robinson on "Neighbours" but that's hardly a bit part.

Loads of people have been in soaps as bit part players - Ruth Jones in "Eastenders, Ben Kingsley, Patrick Stewart, Joanna Lumley and Prunella Scales in Coronation Street. Obviously, Ian McKellen went the other way but that isn't the thread. Apparently, Lawrence Olivier wanted to do Corrie as well but kicked the bucket before he was able to.

The Archers still has a load of thesps regularly in there including Tamsin Greig from Green Wing and Black Books and the girl that plays Dawn in the Office is still there (I think). There are loads of less famous thesps on there as well from the theatre.

As a boy, George Cole was in Olivier's film version of Henry V (and I knew that without recourse to IMDB - I remember our English teacher recognising him when we watched the film in class).

Brad Pitt has a few early career bit parts under his belt, but his cameo in Thelma And Louise was one of those real 'superstar credentials-establishing' cameos.

I suppose Marilyn Monroe's cameo in All About Eve has been mentioned.

On the other side of the the scale, Luke Perry from Beverly Hills 12345 had a supporting role in a US day-time soap called Loving. He was the brother of a woman who tried to escape the evil clutches of a trailer-trash redneck called Eben Japes.

For all the artistic shortcomings of Loving, the soapie came up with one of the greatest lines in daytime television ever, involving the redneck's proposal that the child Luke Perry's sister would bear him be called "Eben Japes Junior". You had to be there, I suppose, but at one point I considered taking the handle Eben Japes Jr.

Oh, and I watched Loving at the time because in my circle of friends it was a bit of "ironic" cultural slumming it, or something.

Anyway, Brad Pitt apparently had a walk-on part in Less Than Zero, which was a zillion times worse than the utterly horrible book it was based on. Earned $36 for that gig, Pitt did.

I watched Footloose earlier, and there was Sarah Jessica Parker playing second fiddle to megastar Lori something.

Oh, and one real bit-part character looked like Matthew McConaughey, who had a minor role in the wonderful Dazed And Confused. In which Ben Affleck had an even smaller role as a bully.

Most of the ones that I can think of have been mentioned already. SocScrim mentioned Nicolas Cage in Fast Times, but did not say that he's listed as Nicolas Coppola in the credits.

A few days back, I mentioned Mischa Barton of The O.C. as the girl in the tent in Sixth Sense.

George Clooney was a jerk boss in a few episodes of Roseanne.

People in Woody Allen movies have been mentioned a few times--seems like he's really good at this. Interestingly, mostly for guys from the Sopranos. If you look up a lot of the major characters from the Sopranos--most of the guys from Tony's crew--you'll notice that they've had bit parts as mobsters or tough guys in Woody Allen movies (Tony Sirico, Paulie Walnuts, has been in five of Woody's movies!).

Another Sopranos one--Michael Imperioli, Christopher, was Spider in Goodfellas...the guy that Joe Pesci shoots in the foot.

Though it came after "Empire", Ratzenberger also has a bizarre little cameo in Gandhi, believe it or not.

As I am cutting and pasting large parts of Wikipedia today, this Roger Corman entry is timely and relevant

A number of noted film directors have worked with Corman, including Francis Ford Coppola, Martin Scorsese, Ron Howard, Peter Bogdanovich, Jonathan Demme, Donald G. Jackson, Gale Anne Hurd, Carl Colpaert, Joe Dante, James Cameron, John Sayles, Monte Hellman, Paul Barter, George Armitage, Jonathan Kaplan, and Jack Hill. Many have said that Corman's influence taught them some of the ins and outs of filmmaking. In the extras for the DVD of The Terminator, director James Cameron refers to his work for Corman as, "I trained at the Roger Corman Film School." The British director Nicolas Roeg served as the cinematographer on The Masque of the Red Death.

Actors who obtained their career breaks working for Corman include Jack Nicholson, Peter Fonda, Bruce Dern, Michael McDonald, Dennis Hopper, Talia Shire, and Robert De Niro.

Harrison Ford "interviews/interrogates" Martin Sheen at the start of Apocalypse Now.

Sylvester Stallone plays a gangster in one of Robert Mitchums two Raymond Chandler films from the mid 70s.....or was it the Elliott Gould one?
