
F1 Thread

Posted by Bombanero - 30-03-2008 13:34

Not much bothered about Formula 1, but this is hilarious.

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by dotmund - 30-03-2008 18:52

And THAT is why they call it Pole Position.

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by jason voorhees - 31-03-2008 12:14

So I take it F1 stands for "Führer 1"

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by Reed Miller - 03-04-2008 14:39

"Nazi Orgy with Hookers" That's got to be like the grand slam of sex scandals.

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by Gangster Octopus - 03-04-2008 14:45

Rubbish. You'd want "Gay Nazi Orgy with Hooker Goats" at the very least.

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by Eggchaser - 03-04-2008 15:41

Honestly, a man can't have an orgy with hookers and Nazi regalia in his own dungeon in peace without some nosy parker splashing all over the pages these days.

What would his parents say? Or indeed his aunt ("Worst suicide ever").

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by ursus arctos - 03-04-2008 15:53

And now he's been "Banned from Bahrein".

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by evilC - 03-04-2008 16:48

http://bp2.blogger.com/_Fch_stLgvzo/RyhdVBVAUcl/AAAAAAAAAAM/PEK_Uyo6LsM/s200/Prince+Harry+nazi+uniform.bmp

Chip off the old Bloch, eh?

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by Twilight Johnny Atom - 04-04-2008 13:43

In case anyone wonders why almost the whole of motorsport (with the notable exception of the Ferrari and Renault F1 teams), as well as most major motor manufacturers and motoring associations the world over are over the moon that Mosley looks to be falling on his sword (and he deserves to for his WW2 dig at BMW and Mercedes if nothing else), here's a little insight into the manipulation, the power and the arrogance of the man:

He's a nasty piece of work

And deserves all that's coming, and more.

The sooner this arsehole gets removed from his position the better. He's done plenty of damage already, more since the newspaper story than on his Friday afternoon jolly, but the damage he's done over the years of his presidency of the FIA - and seemingly not only in the field of motorsport - is unforgivable and, most likely, illegal.

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by evilC - 04-04-2008 13:46

Hear, hear.

It's just something of a shame that Ecclestone will likely be his default successor.

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by Twilight Johnny Atom - 04-04-2008 13:59

Jean Todt, of 'recently quit his job with the FERRARI F1 team' fame is the more likely successor I'd say, although politically it might be wise to keep his appointment under wraps for a short while until this mess has blown over. Perhaps an interim, short-term president is more likely. I'm sure the man with the bargain-basement, cut-priced 100-year TV rights contract will sort something out in his own favour...

It's a shame but it probably won't be Paul Stoddard, Martin Brundle or Jackie Stewart.

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by ursus arctos - 06-04-2008 10:27

Thanks for those links, TJA, very interesting background material that was mostly new to me. I often think that Bernie Ecclestone is the closest thing we have in the Anglo-American world to a Jay Gould-style "robber baron".

In a more scurrilous vein, Max should have known better than to threaten the Screws with a libel claim: "My Nazi Orgy with F1 Boss".

And well done to Kubica for getting the pole in Bahrein. BMW may just be capable of actually challenging for the title this season.

=====

Re:F1 Thread

Posted by Guy Potger - 12-06-2008 12:13

Twilight Johnny Atom wrote:

Jean Todt, of 'recently quit his job with the FERRARI F1 team' fame is the more likely successor I'd say, although politically it might be wise to keep his appointment under wraps for a short while until this mess has blown over. Perhaps an interim, short-term president is more likely. I'm sure the man with the bargain-basement, cut-priced 100-year TV rights contract will sort something out in his own favour...

It's a shame but it probably won't be Paul Stoddard, Martin Brundle or Jackie Stewart.

Yeah. Because that would bring the sport the credibility in needs, wouldn't it?

=====